

REQUEST FOR PROPOSALS FOR Indigenous Support Circle Facilitator

Purpose

The American Indian Cancer Foundation (AICAF) is currently looking for an Indigenous Support Circle Facilitator to support AICAF's survivorship programming. Our national survivorship programming aims to find ways to honor, support, raise awareness on cancer survivorship in Indigenous communities. We are looking for the Indigenous Support Circle Facilitator to use their creative expertise in planning, facilitation, and follow-up processes for our virtual support circle efforts. The ideal candidate will utilize knowledge and skills to help in expanding our support circle efforts.

Cancer support circles are sacred spaces for our relatives. The circles offer opportunities to connect to our values around mind, body, spirit for ourselves and our communities. The AICAF Support Circle is an opportunity to honor and reclaim Indigenous health. Since cancer survivors are at the center of AICAF's work, this opportunity is deeply meaningful and impactful to the work we do at AICAF, alongside and with cancer survivors.

The AICAF Cancer Support Circle was started in May 2020, right as the COVID-19 pandemic started. Since then the virtual cancer support circle has held two circles per month. There have been a number of presenters, activities, and opportunities to learn more about how to care for oneself during the cancer journey. While there have been over 70 people who have registered since the support circle started, there have been challenges with maintaining attendance. There are typically between 2-10 people who attend. To our knowledge, AICAF Cancer Support Circle is the only national virtual cancer support circle for Native patients, caregivers and loved ones. Its presence among Indian Country offers our relatives an important opportunity to connect with one another about their experiences with cancer and their lives beyond cancer, all through Indigenous perspectives and ways of circle keeping.

About the American Indian Cancer Foundation
